

COMBINING SENTENCES: VARIATIONS IN PATTERNS & EMPHASIS

Simple Sentence (one main clause):

She rewrote the entire first act. (She felt both satisfied and uneasy.)
(Subject + Verb)

In combining any two (or more) simple sentences such as the two above, keep in mind the following basic patterns open to you:

I. Compound Sentence (two main clauses):

She rewrote the entire first act, but she felt both satisfied and uneasy.
(Subject+ verb + comma + coordinating conjunction + subject+ verb.)

II. Complex Sentence (subordinate or dependent clause and main clause):

A. The playwright, who rewrote the entire first act, felt both satisfied and uneasy.

(Subject + dependent clause + verb.)

B. While she rewrote the entire first act, she felt both satisfied and uneasy.

(Subordinate conjunction + subject + verb + subject+ verb.)

III. Participial phrase (used as either an adjective or noun) with a main clause:

A. Having rewritten the entire first act, the playwright felt both satisfied and uneasy.

(...-ing + subject+ verb.)

B. Because of feeling satisfied but uneasy, she rewrote the entire first act.

(Preposition ...-ing + subject + verb.)

C. Rewriting the entire first act made her feel both satisfied and uneasy.

(...-ing + verb.)

IV. Adjectives within a main clause:

Both satisfied and uneasy, she rewrote the entire first act.

(Adjective + subject + verb.)
